Prayer to The Muse

Out of the rough instant,
the second, the age,

rain in black elms rain in the oaks, mist

of the high crowns

you find me
one flash ahead of my ear.

Solomon, Soren Bloodfire, Persephone

Find me, Queen of Birds, in rings of grief,
in the illegible hour,

blind and abject without you.

Closing Lines

It was the third week of March, cool wind around the house - - Easter Sunday, you cut the stem in two.

The roots sunk inward, hushed, as they shrank into dirt - - tourniquet and trench fire empty seeds of Heaven . . .

October again, a quickened sundown.
Those few words you left here still speak themselves - - cold petals in the narrowing threads of light.

Sleepy Lonely

Unable to concentrate or distinguish my hand from a groundswell of singing starlets, my mind digs up a childhood time capsule:

Ballad

The woman living inside the walls of our house is called Ann. Before being immured she dreamt of becoming a painter's muse and wife. Eventually, she married a carpenter who walled her into the building he was working on...the very house that we live in now. During the day she is still, probably sleeping. But during the night she does nothing else but sings woeful folk songs. Through my sleepless nights instead of counting sheep, I count the hot and cold drops of her laments as they fall upon my brow.

The ladder

Father is napping. His sleep seems undisturbed. No noise can reach him. Viewers and flowers are everywhere. In a trance, mother keeps telling us that she could never have imagined that a man's body might weight less than a lamb. Mostly carnations. Some red and some white. If the body is well hidden, the soul cannot find it and eventually departs. Where once a walnut grew, now there is a ladder he must climb to reach the sky.
